BUT FIREMAN'S BRAVE STUNT WON'T WIN A MEDAL.

Back Into the Smoke, Commanded Mrs. Prinn From Her Perch on the Fire Escape-Dicky Saved Twice-Woman Happy Though All Else Be Lost to Her.

It's a ten to one shot that Mrs. Bertha Prinn is the happiest woman in the city to-day, even if her apartments were comletely burned out yesterday and she didn't have a cent's worth of her effects covered by insurance. Dicky and Jack were saved from what seemed certain death when fames and smoke filled the rooms, and only for a brave fireman who plunged into the apartment Mrs. Prinn's pets would have Dicky is a yellow canary. Jack is a Skye terrier. Neither knew what to do when the cry "Fire!" rang out through the six story double tenement at 59 Watts street sterday and panic stricken women and children ran helter skelter to get to safety. Dicky was at a disadvantage, because he was locked in his brass cage in the kitchen, and Jack, while he could have reached the are escape, decided to stick by his companion and go to death with him.

Mrs. Catherine Williams, the janitress, iscovered flames shooting from a coal bin in the cellar and she promptly gave the alarm. The fire spread rapidly through an airshaft and burst out on every floor before the tenants could get to the street: There was no escape by going down the d to the fire escapes, while those in the upper part of the house made for the When Engine 30 and Truck 8 arrived on the scene the escapes on the three lower loors were jammed with people. Fifty foot adders were raised and the firemen carried the women and children to safety. Mrs. Prinn stood on the escape on the third floor, and although screaming hyserically, refused to be saved. "Save Dicky and Jack," she wailed.

You won't take me down until my darlings Fireman Reilly of Engine 30, with visions of a medal and promotion, cried out:

"In the kitchen the last I saw of them," led the woman. Reilly darted through the window and groped through the smoke filled kitchen. He reappeared at the window a few seconds later to report to the distracted Mrs. Prinn that he couldn't find the children.

"But they're in the kitchen," insisted

Mrs. Prinn. Where?" asked the fireman. "Dicky's in his cage at the far corner of the room and Jack is under the sofa." "Hell!" exclaimed Reilly as the truth

"Hell!" exclaimed Reilly as the truth dawned upon him.

Then he started to climb through the window, but the hysterical Mrs. Prinn barred his way.

"Don't you dare come out of that room until you rescue my darlings," she commanded, "you horrid, cruel fireman. I really believe you would let them die."

Something in the woman's eye told Reilly that he had better make good, even if visions of medals and promotion faded. He went back and returned with Dicky and Jack. The terrier was overcome by the smoke, but while there was life there was hope. Reilly yelled to the firemen was hope. Reilly yelled to the firemen below to stand by to catch Jack and while Mrs. Prinn closed her eyes the dog was thrown into the air. He landed safely in a fireman's arms and later was revived. Then came Dicky's turn to descend into Reilly made a poor throw and the Then came Dicky's turn to descend into space. Reilly made a poor throw and the cage went high over the head of the firman below and struck the sidewalk with a crash. The bottom fell out, and Dicky, suddenly revived, took it on the fly. He alighted on the window sill of a house on the opposite side of the street. Mrs. Prinn, seeing that Dicky was at least saved from death, although at large, then consented to be rescued and Reilly helped her down the ladder.

to be rescued and Reilly neiped to be rescued and Reilly neiped to the ladder.

The bird was captured by a neighbor and restored to Mrs. Prinn along with

"I've lost my home and didn't have a penny's worth insured," she said, "but I'm the happiest woman alive to-day. I have my Jack and Dicky."

The fire did $5,000 damage.

DEUEL AND "TOWN TOPICS." Witness Testifies That the Justice Corrected the Proofs.

The hearing on the petition for the removal of Justice Joseph M. Deuel was con-finued yesterday before Judge M. L. Stover his office at 60 Wall street. Charles S. Wayne, formerly managing editor of Town Topics, testified that he had been connected rith the publication in 1889, and from 1899 to July, 1905.

Wayne was not sure in which year he first saw Deuel in the office of the paper. He said it was either in 1889 or 1890. He then introduced to Deuel by Eugene

In his later connection with Town Topics, led Wayne, he was accustomed to give the Justice the proofs of the issue to read over before publication. Deuel came to the office of the paper every few days, and plarly on Tuesday, the day for going to press. Sometimes he read the proofs in the sometimes he took them home to them. He always read the galleys ditor in chief. Wayne was puzzled to bow he could tell that the marks on the ofs when it returned from the Justice ere made by the Justice. Justice Deuel, he said, regularly put question marks epposite the passages that he thought ob-sectionable.

Mr. Deuel, the witness testified, did not we a private desk in the Town Topics e: when working there he used Col.

Mann's room.

He wrote certain articles, according to the witness, who picked out certain passages in issues in March, April and June, 1906, written by Deuel.

His usual service seemed to be to watch the licellous matter, in his capacity as invyer, and take care that the paper did not get into hot water. Wayne, as managing editor, told of consulting the Justice ing editor, told of consulting the Justice as to whether certain passages were too dangerous to print. Denel did not give formal orders that such things were to go in and such were not, but, the witness testified, he was consulted in such matters and his advice invariably obeyed, because he was "the only lawyer in the office."

When the preparation of "Fads and Fancies" grew active, Deuel, according to Wayne, came more frequently to the office in order to attend the conferences in Col. Mann's room.

office in order to attend the conferences in Col. Mann's room.

A copy of Town Topics for July 13, 1905, being shown to Wayne, he identified a passage denying the connection of the paper with Rowe, then much talked of in the papers, as having been dictated by Mr. Deuel. The Justice, he said, had listened to the reading over the telephone of the piece originally written. Thinking that it was not strong enough, he had then.

over the wire, made many changes, and dictated a new closing paragraph.

John H. Iselin, attorney for the petitioners, commenced the introduction of a pile of back numbers of Town Topics as evidence. Each number was identified by the witness with the passages such the witness, with the passages sub-tted from it, and read in silence by the urt and the counsel. Martin W. Littlemitted from it, and read in silence by the Court and the counsel. Martin W. Littleton, counsel for the defendant, made a stubborn fight to have the back numbers kept out of the evidence. He submitted that they did not implicate the defendant, and that they could not be had enough to form a cause for the Justice's removal. He was overruled at every point.

The submitting of the copies of Town Topics had to be postponed. The hearing is to be resumed on Friday, November 9, at 2 o'clock. NEW BOOKS.

Continued from Seventh Page.

New" (McClure, Phillips and Company). Here he takes his readers through Europe, much as Mark Twain did in the "Innocents." He is often genuinely funny, and as in the case of that classic, is funniest when he is telling the actual truth, as seen through matter of fact American spectacles.

It took three funny men and an artist to concoct a very small book, "Mother's Geese," by George Barr Baker, George C. Chappell and Oliver Herford (Dodd, Mead and Company). The best part is Mr. T. G. White's pictures. Mr. Chappell contributes most of the jingles and is very weak; the few rhymes by Mr. Baker have a point and are fairly good: Mr. Herford's will not add to his reputation.

For the Very Young.

The art of making good nursery rhymes is by no means so simple as those who turn them out seem to think. Infant critics are the severest of all and demand besides rhythmical jingle some idea of their own view of life in the verses. This is well understood by Mrs. Laura E. Richards in "The Piccolo" (Dana Estes and Company, Boston). They are capital nonsense verses meant for children and only occasionally addressed to their elders, who may find them at times reminiscent of other authors. Children will not mind that, however. The pictures by Josephine Bruce are unpretentious and catch the right spirit.

After leading small children through various regions of outdoor life Mr. Robert W. Chambers this year takes them into "Mountain-Land" (Appletons). There they meet with surprising adventures and converse with many queer creatures, particularly butterflies. The author never rises above youthful comprehension and imparts his information skilfully. Mr. Stone's pictures are good and Mr. Richardson's colored illustrations pretty.

An entertaining series of pictures of the quaint animals that may be made out of vegetables and flowers and other things very simple means is offered in "Lady Hollyhock and Her Friends," by Margaret Coulson Walker (The Baker & Taylor Company). The possibilities of potatoes, peanuts, lemons, handkerchiefs, apples and so on, as well as the charms of gingerbread and cookies, are demonstrated, and the text explains adequately the processes of manufacture.

Once more is the international classe tragedy sung in "The Punch and Judy Book" (Duffield & Company). The poet this time is Mrs. Helen Hay Whitney, whose verse is melodious, but who unfortunately has no respect for tradition. The murderous exploits of Mr. Punch's club are omitted. as well as the deserved punishment for his misdeeds. Perhaps it is necessary to keep the devil out of the modern nursery, but the Punch and Judy show without him becomes very tame.

The verses in "Candle Light," by Georgia Roberts Durston (The Saalfield Publishing Company) are simple and melodious, and such as a child may easily understand Occasionally they are too didactic, and sometimes too long-poems for small children more than three stanzas long are generally tiresome, but nearly all will be welcome in the nursery. The illustrations by Kate Greenland are good and appro-

Mr. E. Warde Blaisdell's familiar caricatures of beasts have been gathered into a small oblong volume called "Animal Serials" (T. Y. Crowell and Company). While the pictures may attract the young, the stories they tell and the letter press can only be appreciated by their elders. That is true, also, of the clever drawings. It is the sort of book a selfish father will want to give to

The adventures of "The Roosevelt Bears" mour Eaton (Edward Stern and Company, Philadelphia). The verse is smooth and single adventures are amusing; they lose much, however, by being collected together. The drawing of the pictures is good, but they are deficient in real humor.

Even small children, we should fancy, must crave more solid intellectual food than the extremely mild tale by Gertrude Smith, called "The Beautiful Story of Doris and Julie" (Harpers). It is harmless, nevertheless, and written in short and simple

The modern child may be familiar with slang and the nether side of life as Mr. James Ball Naylor appears to assume in Witch Crow and Barney Bylow" Saalfield Publishing Company). The language he employs and the adventures he describes, though they may be realistic, are such as old fashioned people prefer to keep children in ignorance of. Mr. Naylor seems to toy around the edge of profanity in some of his expletives.

Other Books. At the very start of Mr. W. D. Howells's wanderings in "Certain Delightful English Towns' (Harpers) the reader knows that he is going to have a pleasant time with a good humored guide. Mr. Howells's digestion is all right; he enjoys his victuals. He makes that plain on page 4, and would have done it sooner had he not been obliged to describe how he got his baggage to his hotel much more cheaply than he could have in America and to draw a pen picture of the young women in charge of the hotel office. The genial, comfortable mood is kept up throughout the journey. There are many incidents of travel that might be thought unimportant if they had not happened to Mr. Howells, many comparisons with things American, many charming descriptions and personal impressions. and now and then a dip into the guide book. The chief value of the book is that Mr. Howells stayed over at places well worth seeing but which to most travellers mean simply a rush from the docks to the railway station. He chats about Plymouth Southampton and finds much that is of interest in both; he stops at Exeter and Bristol and Bath and Folkestone and goes to more visited places, Oxford and Chester and Canterbury and Shrewsbury. He travels in leisurely fashion, with great appreciation of all he sees, which he makes his reader feel as well.

The pretty little volumes of the "Thumbnail" series, published by the Century Company, with their splendid print and handsome stamped leather covers, make admirable holiday gifts. The books issued this season are "The Proverbs of Solomon," with Dr. Lyman Abbott's essay; Dr. Edward Everett Hale's "The Man Without a Country, with the later preface and a good portrait, and Emerson's "Friendship and Character," to which is prefixed the essay on Emerson by Fmma Lazarus. It is illustrated with a picture of the bust by French

In so far as an attempt is made to tell the stories of the artists' lives and as many of the illustrations represent notable masterpieces, "Young People's Story of Art," by Ida Prentice Whitcomb (Dodd, Mead and Company) may be commended. The stories are not told in an interesting manner, however; the author finds it necessary to talk down to her readers, and the effort to cover the people the author has seen. His the whole field in diffuse language renders stories are very readable, but the good come acquainted through it with some buildings, statues and paintings and with some names. It can obtain from it, however, no glimmering of what is meant by art. It is to be regretted that through somebody's blunder the Venus de' Medici and the Venus of Milo have got mixed. The volume of "Historic Buildings of America" put together by Miss Esther Singleton (Dodd, Mead and Company) consists of pictures of a somewhat miscellaneous assortment of edifices, each accompanied by a description by some writer of more or less note. The book would have been much improved by a more careful arrangement and by several exclusions and inclusions.

What the practical value of "The Complete Beauty Book" by Elizabeth Anstruther (Appletons) may be we are not competent to say. It gives directions about many mysteries of the toilet to which man is a stranger and about peculiarities of mind and body that he had better not know about There are pictures of attractive young women doing all sorts of strange things We turn our eyes away from the portrait of a lady snoring on account of incorrect position and regard with doubt the view of "the use of the broom in exercising." It seems more like a weapon of offence than an instrument of cleanliness. No doubt much of the advice will be found helpful if it is followed. One precept we commend: "Don't be helpless in a silly, sloppy way," though we cannot see how those who are so constituted can act

Before long there will be a whole literature about the Jerry McAuley Mission. The biography of "S. H. Hadley of Water Street," by the Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, appears in a new edition (Fleming H. Revell Company). The story of the mission conducted by Mr. Hadley is a strange chapter in the history of New York city. This book is a eulogy, in which stress is laid on individual cases of regeneration, and the life histories and portraits of converts are shown with singular frankness.

The German national game of cards has been imported to this country, and according to Mr. R. F. Foster is becoming very popular. Accordingly he provides "Foster's Skat Manual" (McClure, Phillips and Company), containing all the rules and directions for the game in the clear form that marks all Mr. Foster's books on cards. This volume is intended chiefly for Americans, we fancy, for the cards used are the usual packs. At the end, however, we find an indication of the quaint varieties of cards that are used in Germany.

Two more volumes, VIII. and IX. of the exhaustive new edition of "The Writings of Benjamin Franklin," edited by Albert Henry Smyth, are issued by the Macmillan Company, and this admirable undertaking approaches completion. The letters and papers of Franklin contained in them range from January, 1780, to the end of 1788, the period of the peace negotiations and of the formation of the Constitution.

The Problem of the Poor.

A curious scheme for the disposition of the unemployed and the criminal classes is exploited ingeniously in Guy Thorne's story "Made in His Image." It is an English story, evidently based upon the agitation over the wretched condition of the poor in London during the last winter. The period is projected indefinitely into the future, when a Minister of Industrial Affairs solves the problem of the poor by founding a slave colony in a mining district where all who are unable or unwilling to obtain employment, all drunkards and offenders against the law are segregated and compelled to labor under martial law. The sexes are strictly separated; the victims in this new Siberia are slaves for life. The Minister is an avowed atheist. The labor unions support him in his plan, while religious and philanthropical organizations are opposed to him.

The book is a confused jumble of socialism and Christianity, with a vein of romance which takes an unexpected turn and diverts rather than deepens the interest. The scheme ultimately fails through the mutiny of the slaves led on by anarchists and unconsciously aided by the religious society. The atheist Minister becomes a Christian and the leader of the religious faction becomes a martyr to the cause in an unaccountable manner. Evidently the plot took the bit and ran away with the writer in the final confusion. The book is published by George N. Jacobs.

Some New Flotion.

In venturing into a new field, as he does in "Doubloons" (McClure, Phillips and Company) in company with Mr. Arnold Bennett, Mr. Eden Phillpotts is distinctly successful. It is an exciting, well planned and well carried out story of crime and detection. It may be regretted that Mr. Phillpotts should turn aside from the pictures of country life he does so well, and it may be felt that the vivid descriptions of nature he draws here are a little out of place, or even that good English is a luxury in a detective story, but as long as he chose to write one he must be congratulated on writing a good one. Not that the book has not its faults. The actions of the heroine are not wholly rational, and the clumsy device of making the villain tell his whole story is used, though the reader knows nearly all he has to say. It should be added that that story is told in a very entertaining way. The chief fault, however, is the continuation of the tale with the chase across the Atlantic after the problem has been solved. This is inartistic, though it gives Mr. Philipotts an opportunity for brilliant descriptions of West Indian scenery. The reader will not mind these flaws, but will follow breathlessly to the end. There are many typographical blemishes in this impression, which should be remedied in the plates.

It would seem from "The Silent War" (Life Publishing Company, New York) as if an indigestion of muck rake literature were afflicting Mr. J. A. Mitchell. This is a pity, for the thoroughly good fellow that is jostled about by the various underground creatures that wreak mischief has life in him and deserved to figure in a real story. The suppression of plutocrats by assassination is not original with Mr. Mitchell; the idea has been evolved by several romancers already. His story would read much better if he did not stop between the murders to expound theories. It seems needless cruelty, too, to save one millionaire from the river and, after a realistic scene of drunkenness that awakens the reader's sympathy, have him poisoned in a cocktail by the head waiter at his club. So long as we must have social theory, however, we must protest against the weakness of saving a condemned plutocrat's life from so sentimental and personal a feeling as gratitude. His ending upsets all Mr. Mitchell's romance. He destroys without showing what he wishes to set up.

The Nova Scotia coast, as we figure out. inspires the three tales included in Mr. Henry M. Rideout's "Beached Keels" (Houghton, Mifflin and Company). There is much excellent description of nature in these stories; there is some humor; above all, there is a straining to put romance into the whole field in digues language renders stories are very readable, but the good transfer tickets has increased during the book of little value. A child may be and the bad are contrasted rather violently last three months 75 per cent.

and the psychology is rather of the writer than of the simple people he describes.

Apparently it is the pathology of childhood that attracts Mrs. Annie Hamilton Donnell and which she describes in the stories comprised in "The Very Small Person" (Harpers). No doubt small children have very sensitive spots that older people often hurt, but those Mrs. Donnell describes are abnormal little bundles of nerves that need to be judiciously suppressed. If parents were to try to develop in their young hopefuls the admirable qualities held up to admiration in these tales we might look for a generation of

The contribution of Mr. Richard Harding Davis to the stage is included in a volume called "Farces" (Charles Scribner's Sons) The pieces contained in the book are "The Diotator," "The Galloper" and "Miss Civilization." The illustrations are attractive portraits of young women who have acted in the plays and much less attractive pictures of scenes from the same.

A new edition of a story by Molly Elliott Seawell, first published some years ago. The Loves of the Lady Arabella," appears from the Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianpolis. It is decorated with colored ilustrations by Clarence F. Underwood, which are original in the liberal use of chrome green. It is safe to say that while the drawing is good they are the ugliest colored pictures we have seen as illustra-

There is a total absence of morality in Settina von Hutten's short story, "The One Way Out" (Dodd, Mead and Company). That is the distinctive mark that the author tries to give to an otherwise rather commonplace if pretty love tale. The situation of the man who is accepted at once by three women he has proposed to is humorou and might have been made more of. His way out is wholly lacking in manners, but good manners have no part in the makeup of the society people described here.

A vivid description of life on the plantation in the days before the war and more especially of the relations between the blacks and their masters will be found in the stories contained in Mrs. James H. Dooley's "Dem Good Ole Times" (Doubleday, Page and Company). For local color they are told by darkies and therefore in negro dialect. We rather regret this, though, to be sure, they would otherwise lose a good deal of humor. The colored illustrations are good and very interesting.

It is a pretty foolish sentimental story that C. N. and A. M. Williamson have concocted in "Rosemary in Search of a Father (McClure, Phillips and Company). Of course, from that partnership we must expect a motor car somewhere. It plays its part but does not dominate the story. The mixture of angelic child and Monte Carlo badness was unpleasant in "Tinker and is unpleasant here. The improper French woman is depicted with femining acuteness.

The sentimental mixture of truth and fiction that Max Müller published years ago with the title "Deutsche Liebe" appears in Mr. George P. Upton's translation in a new illustrated edition from A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago. The artists are Margaret and Helen Maitland Armstrong. Their pictures are very interesting; they miss the German character, but perhaps are on that account fitting illustrations of a not wholly sincere book.

Books Received.

"Correspondence of William Pitt with Colonial Governors." 2 vols. Gertrude Selwyn Kimbali. (Macmillans.) "Lord Randolph Churchill." Lord Rosebery.

Shakespeare and the Modern Stage." Sidney Lee. (Charles Scribner's Sons.) "The Law of Railroad Rate Regulation." Joseph enry Beale, Jr., and Bruce Wyman. (William J. tlines for the Study of Biblical History and Literature." Frank Knight Sanders, Ph. D., D. D., and Henry Thatcher Fowler, Ph. D. (Charles "The Secret of the Old Masters." Albert Abend schein. (Appletons.) "Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature." 8 vols. George Brandes. (Macmillans.) nents of Gas Engine Design." Sanford A Moss. (D. Van Nostrand Company.)

"Chippinge Borough." Stanley J. Weyman. (McClure, Phillips and Company.)
"The Positive Outcome of Philosophy." Joseph Dietzgen. (Charles H. Kerr and Company, Chicago.)

"The Physical Basis of Mind and Morals." M. H. Fitch. (Charles H. Kerr and Company.) "What's So and What Isn't." John M. Work (Charles H. Kerr and Company.) "Social and Philosophical Studies." fargue. (Charles H. Kerr and Company.)
"Talks on Teaching Literature." Arlo Bates.

(Houghton, Mifflin and Company.) "Pardner of Blossom Range." Frances Charles. (Little, Brown and Company.) "Paul the Apostle." Edward H. Hall. (Little "My Pilgrimage to the Wise Men of the East, Moncure Daniel Conway. (Houghton, Mifflin and

"Report of New Business Methods to the American Gas Institute." (Cantwell Printing Company "Comrades Three." William R. A. Wilson. (Ap-"Daughters of Destiny." Schuyler Staunton

(The Reilly and Britton Company, Chicago.)

"Saul of Tarsus." Elizabeth Miller. (The Bobbs "The Young Violinist." Mary E. Ireland. (The Saaifield Publishing Company.)
"Four Afoot." Ralph Henry Barbour. (Ap-

"Miss Lochinvar's Return." Marion Ames Taggart. (Appletons.)
"Salvage." J. Aquila Kempster. (Appletons.)
"Confessions of a Detective." Alfred Henry
Lewis. (A. S. Barnes and Company.)
"Love Victorious." John Prendregelst. (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Company, London.)
"Patricia at the Inn." J. C. Smith. (B. W.

Dodge and Company, New York.)
"J. P. Dunbar." William Cadwallader Hudson.
(B. W. Dodge and Company.) "Don Miguel Lehumada." Sue Greenleaf. (B. W. Dodge and Company.)
"The Face in the Girandole." William Frederick

Dix. (Moffat, Yard and Company.)
"American Finance. Domestic." W. R. Lawson.
(William Blackwood and Sons, Edinburgh.) "Northern Spain." Edgar T. A. Wigram. (Adam and Charles Black; Macmillans.) "The Rare Adventures of William Littigors."

"The Nare Adventures of william Lattigors."
(James MacLehose and Company: Macmillans.)
"Poems." Aifred Noyes. (Macmillans.)
"The Romance of John Bainbridge." Henry
George, Jr. (Macmillans.)
"Credit and Its Uses." William A. Prendergast. Lords and Lovers." Olive Tilford Dargan (Charles Scribner's Sons.) "From Libau to Tsushima." Eugene S. Politovsky, translated by Major F. R. Godfrey. (E. P. Dutton and Company.)

"William Blake." Algernon Charles Swinburne. (E. P. Dutton and Company.) "Social Silhouettes." George W. E. Russell, (E. P. Dutton and Company.) "The Future in America." H. G. Weils. (Har pers.)
"The Illustrious O'Hagan." Justin Huntly

McCarthy. (Harpers.)

"My. People of the Plains." Ethelbert Talbot D. D., LL, D. (Harpers.) "The Good Fairy and the Bunnies." Allen Ayrault Green. (A. C. McClurg and Company.) "The Goose Girl." Lucy Fitch Perkins. (A. C. McClurg and Company.)
"Around the Mediterranean." Minnie S. C. Ross. (The Grafton Press, New York.)

BROOKLYN TROLLEY TRANSFERS. Stopper Limit for Passearers Fixed at Fifteen Minutes. The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company has issued an order restricting the limit in the use of transfer tickets to fifteen minutes. and the street transfer agents and conductors have been directed to punch the exact time on the tickets. The issue of

Alfred Henry Lewis' Latest

NOW READY

Confessions of a Detective

Full of the Magic Fascination of All that Pertains to the Dangerous Life of a

It includes, besides the title story, other adventures of Inspector Val. known as

II. The Washington Square Mystery.

III. The Man Who Flew.

IV. The Murder at the Santa Marie. V. The Stolen Red Diamond.

Price, $1.50. Illustrated.

A. S. BARNES & CO., 11-15 East 24th St., New York

DIDN'T GET MRS. VERRAULT. Central Office Men Ready to Arrest Her at the Federal Building.

When the case of the United States against Mrs. Helen Hamilton, better known as Mrs. Bina F. Verrault of so-called "love syndicate" fame, was called before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday two middle aged, patient looking men pricked up their ears and eved the door hopefully. They were Detective Sergeants McCarthy and McDonough of the Central Office, with a warrant for the woman sworn out by Leo Kiesler before Magistrate Cornell on September 10. "We've been looking for her ever since and this examination to-day is the first gleam of hope that we've had that we'll ever get hold of the lady," they that we'll ever get hold of the lady," they explained.

The detectives were doomed to disappointment again, however. The charge against Mrs. Verrault is use of the mails with intent to defraud James S. McClellan, a Philadelphia butcher, through promises of marriage. McClellan was not on hand, but United States District Attorney Francis, and the mail of the control J. Carmody was ready to go on with the examination without him when Hugh Gordon Miller, attorney for the defendant, turned up with the announcement that she was seriously ill and confined to her bed.
The Commissioner is not hard hearted, but he is understood to be rather tired of postponing the cases against Mrs. Verrault. But as the Government's chief evidence was in the hands of the County District Attorney's office on the grand larceny charge he consented to a postponement again to November 13, on which date the woman must appear and confront McClellan and Leo Kiesler, who has made a second charge against her. Kiesler, who is connected with the Mutual Life Insurance Company your that he will never drop his charges against the woman.

After the examination was so quickly concluded the two detectives sadly but patiently gumshoed it toward the door

BIG BELL FOR CITY COLLEGE. The Largest School Bell in the World Sent

Here From the Mencely Foundry. The 7,000 pound bell for the tower of the main hall of the City College buildings, on Washington Heights, arrived last night from the foundry of the Meneely Bell Company at Troy. It is consigned to the com-pany's representative here, William R. Meneely, who expects to have it in place next week.

It is the biggest school bell in the world, being seventy inches in diameter and sixty inches in height. There are three other bells in America like it, all made by the bells in America like it, all made by the same company, including one on the mu-nicipal court house at Minneapolis, Minn., which, chiefly because of the clear atmos-phere of the neighborhood, may be heard at a distance of twenty-three miles.

The Meneely foundry has under construction a chime of eleven bells for Henry C.
Frick, which soon will be placed in the steeple of Calvary Church at Pittsburg and will be the costlest and finest chime in BRONX ZOO RHINO OPERATED ON. Victoria Nyanza Has Her Jaw Fixed and Is Now Doing Nicely.

Friends of Miss Victoria Nyanza, the two horned lady rhinoceros at the Bronx Zoo, will be pleased to learn that the operation performed on her last Thursday has been successful and that she is at present resting quietly in her home, the house of the pachy-Miss Victoria came to the Zoo a year and half ago. Until recently she seemed to have forgotten the joys of the African lake from which she takes her name and to have settled down to the more commonplace comforts of The Bronx. In the last few days, however, Miss Victoria has shown the feverish unrest of an Independence League candidate who has been sidestepped on the ticket, or of a person suffering from toothache. The keepers at first thought it was toothache, but Victoria's fretful head tossings-the two horns are quite sharp-prevented an accurate diagnosis, and it was not until Director Hornaday, fearful of losing the pet of the pachyderm house, called in Dr. W. R. Blair, the veterinarian of the zoo, that Victoria's trouble was found to be necrosis of the law.

That's a very serious trouble for a 700 pound rhino. It causes abscesses that won't heal and it was decided that an imme-won't heal and it was decided that an immediate operation was necessary.

Dr. W. L. Williams, professor of surgery in the State Veterinary College at Cornell, was called in to do the job. He saw at once that Miss Vic had the artistic temperament and would be difficult to handle.

Dr. James T. Gwathmey, an expert in a constitution was surgered to deal with anæsthetics, was summoned to deal with Miss Victoria's temperament, and Dr. Blair stood by to help in case Dr. Williams found himself between the horns of a dilemma which is only another name for a two horned

A thick mattress was prepared and five

A thick mattress was prepared and five husky keepers were summoned to act as trained nurses. They seemed to think that it would be easier for the patient if she were tied, so they got several cables and did the job thoroughly.

Dr. Gwathmey tried cocaine first. Every time he jabbed in the needle the trained nurse department literally went up in the air, but after several applications Miss Victoria lay quiet and Dr. Williams started to operate. He made one cut, but just what happened afterward is not quite clear. The stories differ as to just who did get out first.

Cocaine, it was decided, was hardly the thing, so they gave Miss Vic chloroform—three ounces and a half of it. She lay quiet three ounces and a half of it. She lay quiet after that and the operation was finished.

Later the keepers became alarmed because Miss Vic slept so long, and, entering the cage, they began to shake her gently. The zoo nearly lost five experienced keepers as the result, but Director Hornaday was assured that Miss Victoria had suffered no loss of vigor from the big dose of chloroform. He reported last exeming that the 700 pound He reported last evening that the 700 pound young lady was doing nicely and would undoubtedly recover.

BRENTANO'S ANNOUNCE THESE IM-PORTANT BOOKS JUST PUBLISHED.

DRAMATIC OPINIONS AND ESSAYS With a capital and characteristic introduc-tion by James Huncker. 2 vols., boxed. 82.50 net; express extra

DECORATIVE ART IN AMERICA By OSCAR WILDE By OSCAR WILDE
A new collection of reviews, letters, etc., of this elusive, perplexing man of genius, with an introduction and notes by Richard Butler Glaenzer.
12mo., cloth. $1.50 net; by mail. $1.65

A GAME AT LOVE AND OTHER PLAYS By GEO. SYLVESTER VIERECK A volume composed of five plays sparkling with thoughts from a modern pen.

By Mrs. BAILLIE-REYNOLDS

One of the recent "best sellers" in London and now imported for sale in this country 12mo. $1.50 BUCK WHALEY'S MEMOIRS

Edited by Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart. By a fortunate accident the manuscript of this eccentric irishman was recently dis-covered and is now published in its entirety. It includes the famous trip from Dublin to Jerusalem.
Large 8vo. $5.00 net; express extra For sale everywhere or supplied by the publishers.

BRENTANO'S, Union Square, New York

WATSON'S MAGAZINE

The true story of TOM WAT-SON'S retirement is told in the

NOVEMBER NUMBER It is interesting Reading BUY IT TODAY

ALL NEWSSTANDS

Under the new control the magazine is to be BIGGER. BROADER, more RADICAL and more VIGOROUS than ever

15 CENTS

Mr. Ernest Dressel North

desires to inform his Friends and Patrons that he has recently returned from a purchasing tour abroad, where he secured and has on sale many Choice, Rare and Second Hand Books, as well as Autograph Letters and Manuscripts.

of you really wish to know THE JOY OF BOOKS with expressions of appreciation, by ancient writers and modern of the value and pleasure of good books, express your desire by postal to C.L.Stebbins, 25 Beacon St. Boston, whereupon while they last you will receive; with no hidden expense attached, a little book of quotations.

When in Boston Browse in GOODSPEED'S BOOK SHOP,

Rare books, Engravings for extra-illustrating, Autographs and Ex-libris. Collectors' wants given special attention. Monthly catalogues issued and sent free to buyers on request. "Anything that's a book."

THE GOOD OLD CLASSICS (in English), old Eng-

DOG FIGHTS OFF BURGLAR. Left Alone in the House-Hadly Cut but Victorious

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 2.-Left to guard the home of his master in the latter's absence, a big Newfoundland dog belonging to David Conover of Chelsea drove off a burglar after a bloody battle in which the dog was badly cut by the thief. When Conover returned after a few hours absence the dog crawled from an upstairs room, where his master found everything in con-fusion and blood spattered over floor and walls.

A trail of discarded clothing which the thief had evidently gathered up before the dog attacked him had been left in his flight. Conover's watch and money were found safe in a bureau drawer. The thief had torn up a sheet to bandage his hurts.

ART SALES AND EXHIBITIONS.

Antique and Modern Statuary.

ART SALES AND EXHIBITIONS.

ART SALES AND EXHIBITIONS.

Commodes,

THE FIFTH AVENUE ART GALLERIES

366, 368 Fifth Ave. (near 34th St.) JAMES P. SILO, Auctioneer.

Bronzes.

Cabinets,

Announce the Complete Exhibition

Superb Aubusson Tapestry Suites, Antique Tapestry Arras, Carved Tables, Fountains, Arms and Armor, Textiles, Clocks, Garden Marbles, etc.

M. Gustave de la Brunniere

OF PARIS, FRANCE

from the newly furnished different Etages in his Costly Apartment Hotel, 93 Champs Elysees and from his Chateau, at Vincennes.

The Appointments Belonging to Madame Gustav de Stralë

OF THE SWEEDISH LEGATION, WASHINGTON, D. C., A Casket of Magnificent Jewels.

We are pleased to announce also that M. de Souhami has concluded to dispose of his private collection of Rare Objets d'Art, By Auction on Saturday Afternoon, Nov. 10th.

Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Nov. 7, 8, 9 & 10,

AT 2:30 O'CLOCK EACH DAY.